

ディケンズと「選択」としての文体

今林 修 (広島大学)

1. A Christmas Carol (1843, 1853)

*In came a fiddler with a music-book, and went up to the lofty desk, and made an orchestra of it, and tuned like fifty stomach-aches. In came Mrs. Fezziwig, one vast substantial smile. In came the three Miss Fezziwigs, beaming and lovable. In came the six young followers whose hearts they broke. In came all the young men and women employed in the business. In came the housemaid, with her cousin, the baker. In came the cook, with her brother's particular friend, the milkman. In came the boy from over the way, who was suspected of not having board enough from his master; trying to hide himself behind the girl from next door but one, who was proved to have had her ears pulled by her mistress. In they all came, one after another; some shyly, some boldly, some gracefully, some awkwardly, some pushing, some pulling; in they all came, anyhow and everyhow. Away they all went, twenty couple at once; hands half round and back again the other way; down the middle and up again; round and round in various stages of affectionate grouping; old top couple always turning up in the wrong place; new top couple starting off again, as soon as they got there; all top couples at last, and not a bottom one to help them. When this result was brought about, old Fezziwig, clapping his hands to stop the dance, cried out, "Well done!" and the fiddler plunged his hot face into a pot of porter, especially provided for that purpose. But scorning rest, upon his reappearance, he instantly began again, though there were no dancers yet, as if the other fiddler had been carried home, exhausted, on a shutter, and he were a bran-new man resolved to beat him out of sight, or perish. (Facsimile, 59-60 / Collins, 15) [*Marginal stage-direction Cheerful narrative]

Cf.

As the manager of the Performance sits before the curtain on the boards and looks into the Fair, a feeling of profound melancholy comes over him in his survey of the bustling place. There is a great quantity of eating and drinking, making love and jilting, laughing and the contrary, smoking, cheating, fighting, dancing and fiddling: there are bullies pushing about, bucks ogling the women, knaves picking pockets, policemen on the look-out, quacks (other quacks, plague take them!) bawling in front of their booths, and yokels looking up at the tinselled dancers and poor old rouged tumblers, while the light-fingered folk are operating upon their pockets behind. Yes, this is VANITY FAIR; not a moral place certainly; nor a merry one, though very noisy. Look at the faces of the actors and buffoons when they come off from their business; and Tom Fool washing the paint off his cheeks before he sits down to dinner with his wife and the little Jack Puddings behind the canvas. The curtain will be up presently, and he will be turning over head and heels, and crying, "How are you?" (Vanity Fair, 5)

3. Great Expectations (1861)

- (1) "MI DEER JO i OPE U R KRWITE WELL i OPE i SHAL SON B HABELL 4 2 TEEDEGE U JO AN THEN WE SHORL B SO GLODD AN WEN i M PRENGTD 2 U JO WOT LARX AN BLEVE ME INF XN PiP." (46)
- (2) The forge was shut up for the day, and Joe inscribed in chalk upon the door (as it was his custom to do on the very rare occasions when he was not at work) the monosyllable HOUT, accompanied by a sketch of an arrow supposed to be flying in the direction he had taken. (99)
- (3) "Next day, Sir," said Joe, looking at me as if I were a long way off, "having cleaned myself, I go and I see Miss A."
"Miss A., Joe? Miss Havisham?"
"Which I say, Sir," replied Joe, with an air of legal formality, as if he were making his will, "Miss A., or otherways Havisham ..." (224)

- (4) “It’s bad about here ... You’ve been lying out on the meshes, and they’re dreadful aguish. Rheumatic, too.” (Pip, 19)
- (5) “... Hulks are prison-ships, right ’cross th’ meshes.” We always used that name for marshes, in our country. (Mrs. Gargery, 15)
- (6) “I’m wrong in these clothes. I’m wrong out of the forge, the kitchen, or off th’ meshes.” (Joe, 225)
- (7) “[He calls the knaves, Jacks], this boy!” said Estella with disdain, before our game was out. “And what coarse hands he has. And what thick boots!” (61)
- (8) I took the opportunity of being alone in the court-yard, to look at my coarse hands and my common boots. My opinion of those accessories was not favourable. They had never troubled me before, but they troubled me now, as vulgar appendages. I determined to ask Joe why he had ever taught me to [call those picture-cards, Jacks], which ought to be called knaves. I wished Joe had been rather more genteelly brought up, and then I should have been so too. (63)
- (9) I set off on the four-mile walk to our forge; pondering, as I went along, on all I had seen, and deeply revolving that I was a common labouring-boy; that my hands were coarse; that my boots were thick; that I had fallen into a despicable habit of calling knaves Jacks; that I was much more ignorant than I had considered myself last night, and generally that I was in a low-lived bad way. (66)
- (10) “... I wish you hadn’t taught me to [call Knaves at cards, Jacks]; and I wish my boots weren’t so thick nor my hands so coarse.” (71)

Texts

- Collins, Philip (1975) Charles Dickens: The Public Readings. Oxford: The Clarendon Press.
- Dickens, Charles (1843) A Christmas Carol. Facsimile Edition from the Original First Edition. Tokyo: Yushodo, 1977.
- Dickens, Charles (1837-1839) Oliver Twist. Facsimile Edition from the Ten Monthly Parts, 1846. Tokyo: Yushodo, 1977.
- Dickens, Charles (1860-1861) Great Expectations. The Clarendon Dickens. Ed. Margaret Cardwell. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 1993.
- Thackeray, William Makepeace (1849-50) Vanity Fair. Ed. Geoffrey and Kathleen Tillotson. London: Methuen, 1963.
- Shakespeare, William (1595) Romeo and Juliet. The Riverside Shakespeare. Ed. G. Blakemore Evans, and J. J. M. Tobin. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1997.

References

- Gerson, Stanley (1967) Sound and Symbol in the Dialogue of the Works of Charles Dickens. Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell.
- Leech, Geoffrey and Mick Short (1981, 2007) Style in Fiction: A Linguistic Introduction to English Fictional Prose. London: Longman / Harlow: Pearson Education.
- McCrumb, Robert, William Cran, and Robert MacNeil (1986) The Story of English. London: Faber and Faber.
- Mugglestone, Lynda (1995, 2002) ‘Talking proper’: The Rise of Accent as Social Symbol. Oxford: The Clarendon Press / Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- Partridge, Eric (1937, 1979) A Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English, 2 vols. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul.
- Ross, A. S. C. (1956) “U and Non-U,” in Noblesse Oblige: An Enquiry into the Identifiable Characteristics of the English Aristocracy, edited by Nancy Mitford, Hamish Hamilton, London, 11-36.
- Simpson, John A. and Edmund S. C. Weiner, prepared (1989) The Oxford English Dictionary, Second Edition on CD-ROM Version 3.1. Oxford: The Clarendon Press, 2002.
- 豊田昌倫 (2012)「Phonostylisticsへの試み—Auden と Owen の詩を中心に—」,『文体論研究』, 第58号, 105-112.
- 植木研介 (2004)『チャールズ・ディケンズ研究—ジャーナリストとして、小説家として—』東京：南雲堂フェニックス。
- Whitney, W. D. et al. (1889-91) The Century Dictionary, 7 vols. New York: Century Co. Reprinted by Meicho-Fukyukai, Tokyo, 1980.

2. Oliver Twist

A. The Ten Monthly Instalment Version (1846)

The church clocks chimed three quarters past eleven, as two figures emerged on London Bridge. One, which advanced with a swift and rapid step, was that of a woman who looked eagerly about her as though in quest of some expected object; the other figure was that of a man, who slunk along in the deepest shadow he could find, and, at some distance, accommodated his pace to hers: stopping when she stopped: and as she moved again, creeping stealthily on: but never allowing himself, in the ardour of his pursuit, to gain upon her footsteps. Thus, they crossed the bridge, from the Middlesex to the Surrey shore, when the woman, apparently disappointed in her anxious scrutiny of the foot-passengers, turned back. The movement was sudden; but he who watched her, was not thrown off his guard by it; for, shrinking into one of the recesses which surmount the piers of the bridge, and leaning over the parapet the better to conceal his figure, he suffered her to pass on the opposite pavement. When she was about the same distance in advance as she had been before, he slipped quietly down, and followed her again. At nearly the centre of the bridge, she stopped. The man stopped too.

It was a very dark night. The day had been unfavourable, and at that hour and place there were few people stirring. Such as there were, hurried quickly past: very possibly without seeing, but certainly without noticing, either the woman, or the man who kept her in view. Their appearance was not calculated to attract the importunate regards of such of London's destitute population, as chanced to take their way over the bridge that night in search of some cold arch or doorless hovel wherein to lay their heads; they stood there in silence: neither speaking nor spoken to, by any one who passed.

A mist hung over the river, deepening the red glare of the fires that burnt upon the small craft moored off the different wharfs, and rendering darker and more indistinct the murky buildings on the banks. The old smoke-stained storehouses on either side, rose heavy and dull from the dense mass of roofs and gables, and frowned sternly upon water too black to reflect even their lumbering shapes. The tower of old Saint Saviour's Church, and the spire of Saint Magnus, so long the giant-warders of the ancient bridge, were visible in the gloom; but the forest of shipping below bridge, and the thickly scattered spires of churches above, were nearly all hidden from sight.

The girl had taken a few restless turns to and fro—closely watched meanwhile by her hidden observer—when the heavy bell of St. Paul's tolled for the death of another day. Midnight had come upon the crowded city. The palace, the night-cellars, the jail, the madhouse: the chambers of birth and death, of health and sickness, the rigid face of the corpse and the calm sleep of the child: midnight was upon them all.

The hour had not struck two minutes, when a young lady, accompanied by a grey-haired gentleman, alighted from a hackney-carriage within a short distance of the bridge, and, having dismissed the vehicle, walked straight towards it. They had scarcely set foot upon its pavement, when the girl started, and immediately made towards them.

They walked onward, looking about them with the air of persons who entertained some very slight expectation which had little chance of being realised, when they were suddenly joined by this new associate. They halted with an exclamation of surprise, but suppressed it immediately; for a man in the garments of a countryman came close up—brushed against them, indeed—at that precise moment. (Facsimile, 259-60)

B. The Public Reading Version (1868)

The churches chimed three quarters past eleven, as the two figures emerged on London Bridge. The young woman advanced with a swift and rapid step, and looked about her as though in quest of some expected object; the young man, who slunk along in the deepest shadow he could find, and, at some distance, accommodated his pace to hers: stopping when she stopped: and as she moved again, creeping stealthily on: but never allowing himself, in the ardour of his pursuit, to gain upon her. Thus, they crossed the bridge, from the Middlesex to the Surrey shore, when the woman, disappointed in her anxious scrutiny of the foot-passengers, turned back. The movement was sudden; but the man was not thrown off his guard by it; for, shrinking into one of the recesses which surmount the piers of the bridge, and leaning over the parapet the better to conceal his figure, he suffered her to pass. When she was about the same distance in advance as she had been before, he slipped quietly down, and followed her again. At nearly the centre of the bridge she stopped. He stopped.

It was a very dark night. The day had been unfavourable, and at that hour and place there were few people stirring. Such as there were, hurried past: possibly without seeing, certainly without noticing, either the woman, or the man. Their appearance was not attractive of such of London's destitute population, as chanced to take their way over the bridge that night; and they stood there in silence: neither speaking nor spoken to.

The girl had taken a few turns to and fro—closely watched by her hidden observer—when the heavy bell of St. Paul's tolled for the death of another day. Midnight had come upon the crowded city. Upon the palace, the night-cellar, the jail, the madhouse: the chambers of birth and death, of health and sickness, upon the rigid face of the corpse and the calm sleep of the child.

A young lady, accompanied by a grey-haired gentleman, alighted from a hackney-carriage. They had scarcely set foot upon the pavement of the bridge, when the girl started, and joined them.

(Collins, 474)

0. Introduction

Love goes toward love, as schoolboys from their books;

But love from love, toward school with heavy looks. (Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet, II. ii. 156-7)